A soft answer turneth away
Wrath but grievous Words
Stir up Anger

Extract from Journal

'Twas on the first of June, while at the Bluff we lay
We left the Ship at daylight, our custom every day
Two boats went round the Bluffs and two went down the bay
But soon we had to put about and for the harbour steer.
For soon the sea was in a foam just like a mug of beer
The Captain of the Rosalie that in new River lay
Was forced to shelter at the Bluff by the gale that blew that day
When at the harbours mouth, we struck our mast and sail
And sixteen whale-boats with their oars. then buffeted the gale
Then to a ten-knot tide, we pulled along the shore
And every stroke we pulled, we gained an inch or more
When near the Ship we saw a sight that struck us with amaze
And for a moment every eye was fixed in stedfast gaze
Upon a boat without an oar now driven by the gale
And in the stern sheets sat erect the subject of our tale
Where he was bound to who can tell, on such a stormy day.
His course within a point, or to, then for Roboka lay.
Or he might take perhaps, Dog Island in his way.
A shore boat met him as he flew, and took the boat in tow,
And now on board the Lucy Ann again he'll draw the bow
